Senior Director Business Development, SWISS International Air Lines Ltd.

“We know that we have to change the way how we organize the overall aviation operation. While the ATM Masterplan sets a clear direction, key stakeholders have to be courageous and very possibly change their way of working to embrace the opportunities of new technology. I am looking forward to the #AeroDays2020 to discuss how we can accelerate the path of adopting new technologies to the European aviation system”

Jan-Christian Schraven is Senior Director Business Development at SWISS International Air Lines Ltd. In Zurich, Switzerland. Jan-Christian has spend his career in various positions in the airline industry. He was responsible for steering the airline operation of SWISS and for designing and developing the airlines commercial flight network. At Lufthansa he held various positions in strategic planning of fleet and flight network.

Under his responsibility SWISS introduced innovative ways to increase the efficiency of airline operation by increasing the collaboration among aviation partners. With the support of SESAR the greener wave concept was developed mitigating most holdings in the morning wave. Further on Jan-Christian introduced several new technological solutions to the operation center to better steer the overall operation.

Jan-Christian is a member of the ATM Masterplan Committee at SESAR representing the airspace users. At SWISS he is working on introducing novel management techniques as a foundation to quicker adapt new technologies.
